Food Allergies

I often use food as a part of the therapy process. Food items may include fruit snacks, animal crackers, pretzels or other gummy or cracker. I also have suckers, gum, and mints available.

Even when not used as part of an attachment promoting game, food and snacks are an important part of providing ‘felt safety’ in the therapy room. Children should never be distracted by feeling hungry. Some children use food to regulate- mostly through the sensory experience (sucking, crunchy, chewy, sweet, etc.) Although we will work to find other ways to regulate, it can be appropriate to take a child’s current coping strategies (possibly regulating through food), support those strategies, and eventually develop new or additional strategies. If your child asks for a snack, my answer is almost always “yes.” We can talk about this in more detail during the intake process.

If your child has sensitivities or food allergies, please let me know and I will either accommodate them or have you bring in snacks that I keep in the office and reserve for your child only.

_____ Initial here that you have read and understand my food policies.
